National Council on Problem Gambling Hires
Communications Manager

The National Council on Problem Gambling (NCPG), an advocacy organization for problem gamblers and their families, has announced the selection of Cait Huble, MBA, as its new communications manager. Huble will fill the recently created role, overseeing the organization’s external communications and public awareness and outreach efforts.

“We are very pleased to announce this new position with NCPG,” says Executive Director Keith Whyte. “Cait will bring leadership and creativity to the Council’s programs and a deep sense of commitment to the nonprofit sector. With her capabilities, I am confident we can focus our communications efforts on growing the organization while continuing to engage our current members.”

Huble’s resume includes over ten years of communications strategy and planning experience at nonprofit organizations. Prior to joining the National Council on Problem Gambling, she was the communications director for a nonprofit arts organization in Tucson, Arizona, where she was responsible for developing and implementing strategies to market the agency’s programs, media relations, internal and external communications and special events planning. Mrs. Huble is a graduate of Arizona State University and Concordia University Irvine and holds a bachelor’s degree in management and a master’s of business administration degree in marketing and communications respectively.

“I look forward to joining the team in this new capacity,” remarks Huble. “NCPG already does a fantastic job of communicating to a variety of stakeholders and I am excited to build upon these efforts as new trends evolve within the industry.”
